PROBLEMS ?

Different tape manufacturers use varying techniques to record their movies. These variations can cause problems for video recorder owners. Basically there are three main problem areas.

The first is the bending of the picture at the top of the screen. Most often this in noticeable on older TV sets and is caused by: (A). The mechanical differences between the video recorder the movie was made on and your video recorder, or (B) Your televisions inability to lock into the less than broadcast perfect signal that the video recorder produces. The easiest solution is to find a good TV technician who can increase the horizontal timing.

The second problem is vertical rolling of the picture. This is caused by the anti-copying that the movie manufacturers put on their tapes. Some movies will affect certain brands of TV"s inability to lock into the signal from the tape. Adjustment of the vertical on the TV can sometimes stop the roll; if this fails, the next step is the addition of a vertical stabilizer with an RF module.

The third problem is mistracking. This usually shows itself as a band of white, snow-like interference in the picture. Sometimes slight mistracking can cause the picture to appear grainy or jumpy. The cure is easy; every video recorder has a tracking control on it somewhere; simply move the control from side to side until the picture clears.
